SYNOPSIS

Nothing seems to be going right for Sammy today. At school, he got in trouble for kicking a fence, then the cafeteria ran out of pizza for lunch. After he walks home in the pouring rain, he finds his autistic little brother Benji is having a bad day too. On days like this, Benji has a special play-box where he goes to feel cozy and safe. Sammy doesn't have a special place, and he's convinced no one cares how he feels or even notices him. But somebody is noticing, and may just have an idea on how to help Sammy feel better.

In this tender story about siblings, author Sally J. Pla shares her experience of raising sons with different personality traits and needs. Benji, the Bad Day, and Me embraces the philosophy that we are all part of a wide spectrum of neurodiversity. And on those really bad, rotten days, you can always count on family to be there for you.

BACKGROUND

Author's Note from Sally J. Pla

“At our house, our autistic and non-autistic sons alike had fuzzy blankets they carried around, and they often asked—on both good days and bad—to be ‘wrapped tight into burritos.’ This can be comfy and calming. And it’s what sparked the idea for this story.

It’s important to note that no two autistic kids are alike, and their needs and behaviors will be different. Some, like Benji, are supersensitive to sensory input—the world can feel too bright, too loud, and too intense. Other kids are sensory seekers. Some may like to drum on things and clap their hands and shout out. And many kids like to ‘stim,’ to rhythmically fidget or move as a way to disperse extra energy and stress.

Certain autistic kids will visit a sensory gym or OT (occupational therapy) clinic, as in the Super-Happy Lady illustration, to help with coordination and sensory processing. But not all. Different kids have different needs, strengths, and challenges.

It’s not always easy being a brother or sister. It’s hard, at time, to be patient. We all have bad days, and it’s okay to express those feelings in appropriate ways. Despite the bad days, though, sibling bonds can be one of life’s best and most important gifts.

Thank you for reading about Benji and Sammy!”

Explaining Autism to Children

The National Autistic Society defines Autism as “a lifelong developmental disability that affects how people perceive the world and interact with others. Autistic people see, hear and feel the world differently to other people. If you are autistic, you are autistic for life; autism is not an illness or disease and cannot be ‘cured’. Often people feel being autistic is a fundamental aspect of their identity. Autism is a spectrum condition. All autistic people share certain difficulties, but being autistic will affect them in different ways. Some autistic people also have learning disabilities, mental health issues, or other conditions, meaning people need different levels of support. All people on the autism spectrum learn and develop. With the right sort of support, all can be helped to live a more fulfilling life of their own choosing.”

It’s important to emphasize and recognize strengths and interests of all children, as opposed to labeling and solely focusing on the differences amongst Autistic people compared to non-Autistic people.

When speaking about Autism with young people who are or are not familiar with Autism, consider showing the video “Amazing Things Happen” by Alexander Amelines, published by the National Autistic Society. The four-minute animated film simply and concisely explains the various types of differences that people have, and that those variations are also our strengths. All brains work differently, and that’s why people are good at all sorts of things (<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=RbwRrVw-CRo>).

VOCABULARY

(Language Standards, Vocabulary Acquisition & Use, Strands 4–6)

The story contains several content-specific and academic words and phrases that may be unfamiliar to students. Based on students' prior knowledge, review some or all of the vocabulary below.

Content Specific

tiptoe, karate, “Ka-Cha!”, clinic, waiting room, smoothie, burrito, “Ka-thunk!”

Academic

wiggles, instant, fault, downtown, blueness, wrap

BEFORE READING

Prereading Focus Questions

(Reading Standards, Craft & Structure, Strand 5 and Integration of Knowledge & Ideas, Strand 7)

(Speaking & Listening Standards, Comprehension & Collaboration, Strands 1 and 2)

Before introducing this book to students, you may wish to develop background knowledge and promote anticipation by posing questions such as the following:

1. What are some things you do when you're feeling upset or angry? How do you manage your emotions if you're feeling unhappy? What makes you feel better or helps you to calm down? Why do you do those things?
2. Describe a bad day that you've had recently. What happened on that day? What things made you feel upset or sad? Why was it a bad day for you? How did you move past it?
3. How do your family or friends help you when you need support? When you're having a bad day, how do your family and friends make you feel better? What are some things that they do, and why does this comfort you?
4. Why are differences important? What would it be like if everyone was the same? Why is it important to be unique?
5. Have you ever felt frustrated with anyone in your family or with a friend? What did it feel like? How did you let them know that you were feeling frustrated?
6. How is family important to you? What kinds of things do you like to do with your family? Do you have siblings or cousins that you enjoy spending time with? What do you like to do together? Why?
7. How do you show your family that you care about them? What are some things that you do to help your family? Why?

Note: Consider introducing Autism to students using the information provided in the Background section of this guide to help familiarize children who may not know or have encountered a child or adult with Autism. This is not necessary to engage students in the story, but may be helpful for your particular set of students or classroom.

Exploring the Book

(Reading Standards, Key Ideas & Details, Strand 1, Craft & Structure, Strand 5, and Integration of Knowledge & Ideas, Strand 7)

(Speaking & Listening Standards, Comprehension & Collaboration, Strands 1 and 2)

1. Book Title Exploration: Talk about the title of the book, Benji, the Bad Day, and Me. Then ask students what they think this book will most likely be about and whom the book might be about. What do they think might happen? What information do they think they might learn? What makes them think that?
2. Read Sally J. Pla's Biography: Read about Sally J. Pla on the back cover as well as on her website at <https://sallyjpla.com/>. Sally has written several books for children. Encourage students to think about how she comes up with new ideas for her books, and what could have been her possible inspiration for writing Benji, the Bad Day, and Me.
3. Read Ken Min's Biography: Read about Ken Min on the back cover as well as at his website <http://kenminart.com/>. Have students look into his other illustrations and compare and contrast across books. How are his illustrations similar? How are they different? Does the subject matter influence his illustrations?
4. Encourage students to stop and jot in their reading notebooks during the read-aloud when they: learn new information, see a powerful image, have an emotional reaction or an idea, have a question, or hear new words.
5. Have students quickly write a feeling in their notebooks during reading. After reading, ask students why they wrote that feeling down and have them write a journal entry about it.

Setting a Purpose for Reading

(Reading Standards, Key Ideas & Details, Strands 1–3)

Have students read to find out:

- why Sammy is having a bad day
- who Benji is and his relationship to Sammy
- how Benji comforts Sammy when he's feeling sad
- why it's important to celebrate our differences and recognize how our differences can be assets
- how familial love helps us when we're feeling sad or frustrated

Encourage students to consider why the author, Sally J. Pla, would want to share with young people this sibling story about two brothers who comfort each other when they're in need in their own particular ways.

AFTER READING

Discussion Questions

After students have read the book, use these or similar questions to generate discussion, enhance comprehension, and develop appreciation for the content. Encourage students to refer to passages and/or illustrations in the book to support their responses. To build skills in close reading of a text, students should cite evidence with their answers.

Literal Comprehension

(Reading Standards, Key Ideas & Details, Strands 1–3)
(Speaking & Listening Standards, Comprehension & Collaboration, Strands 1–3; and Presentation of Knowledge & Ideas, Strand 4)

1. What are some of the things that happened to Sammy during his bad day? How do those things make him feel?
2. What does Mama say as he walks in the door from school? Why does she say this to Sammy?
3. Where is Benji when Sammy gets home?
4. How did Sammy, Benji, and Mama decorate Benji's box? Why does Benji have a special box?
5. What does Mama keep saying to Sammy when he's inside the house? How does he react?
6. Who is the Super-Happy Lady? What does she do? What does Sammy think of it?
7. What does Mama do to Benji when they get home from the clinic?
8. What does Sammy ask Benji to do? What does he want to teach him?
9. What happens after Sammy spills the milk? What does Benji do and say to Sammy?

—Shelf Awareness

“An ordinary story is given a spark of life by the inclusion of an empathetic little brother with autism.”

—Kirkus Reviews

“Pla doesn’t overtly state that Benji is autistic but emphasizes his behaviors and qualities. With a light touch, Pla offers a thoughtful reminder that all siblings need extra love and attention sometimes.”

—Publishers Weekly

10. What do Benji and Sammy do together at the end of the story? Who else joins them?

Extension/Higher Level Thinking

(Reading Standards, Key Ideas & Details, Strands 1-3; and Craft & Structure, Strands 4 and 6)

(Speaking & Listening Standards, Comprehension & Collaboration, Strands 1-3; and Presentation of Knowledge & Ideas, Strand 4)

1. How do Sammy’s feelings change from the beginning of the story to the end of the story? What are the different events that cause frustration for Sammy, and what are the events that cause joy? How can you tell?
 2. Why does Sammy get frustrated with Mama and Benji during his bad day? Do you think he feels that way on other days? Have you ever felt frustration towards your family members when you’re having a bad day? How does a bad day make you feel angry or upset about things you wouldn’t normally be mad about? Why?
 3. What are some repetitive statements that Sammy mentions during the story? For example, Sammy says, “When I’ve had a bad day, no one tiptoes or speaks softly.” How do you think that makes Sammy feel? Why do you think Sammy’s mom chooses to treat the two boys’ bad days differently? What are some of the other times that Sammy mentions that he’s not allowed to do certain things when Benji is? Why is that?
 4. Why do you think being wrapped in a blue blanket is comforting for both Sammy and Benji? How do you think that makes them feel?
5. What is unique about the way Benji comforts Sammy? Benji doesn’t say many words throughout the book. How does he show Sammy that he cares about him without saying it in words? Why do you think he does that?
 6. How do Sammy and Benji show what it’s like to have a sibling? What kinds of things do siblings like to do together? What do they fight about? Why?
 7. Why do you think the word “Autism” is never mentioned in the story? Why do you think Sally J. Pla never referred to Benji as Sammy’s Autistic brother?
 8. What are Benji’s strengths in the story? What are Sammy’s strengths? How do both brothers use their strengths in the book? How do they use their strengths to make themselves feel better and to comfort each other?
 9. How are Benji and Sammy similar? What interests do they share? How are they also different? How do you know from reading the story? Do you think it’s important to have similarities with someone but also have differences? Why?

Reader's Response

(Writing Standards, Text Types & Purposes, Strands 1–3 and Production & Distribution of Writing, Strands 4–6)

1. What is one big thought that you have after reading this book? Think about the sibling relationship between Benji and Sammy. How and why do you think they help and comfort each other in times of need?
2. What do you think author Sally J. Pla's message is to the reader? Think about possible motivations behind Sally J. Pla's intentions in writing this book. What do you think she wanted to tell her readers?
3. Have students make a text-to-self connection. What kind of connections did you make from this book to your own life? What do Sammy's experiences, thoughts, and feelings mean to you?
4. Have students make a text-to-text connection. Did you think of any other books while you read Benji, the Bad Day, and Me? Why did you make those connections?
5. Have students make a text-to-world connection. What kind of connections did you make from this book to what you have seen in the world, such as on television or in a newspaper? Why did this book make you think of that?
6. What does friendship mean to students after reading? After reading Benji, the Bad Day, and Me, what does Sammy and Benji's relationship demonstrate about friendship and/or having a relationship with a sibling? Why? How did your meaning of friendship change after reading Benji, the Bad Day, and Me?
7. How has a family member, such as a sibling or cousin, or close friend impacted your life? What are some memories that you have of someone doing something to help you in times of need? What did they do, and how was this meaningful?
8. How does author Sally Pla use her background and experience to write this story? What about her life may have contributed to or inspired her to write this story? Do you think this makes her story more powerful or effective? Why or why not? How can writers “mine” their own lives to create stories?

ELL Teaching Activities

(Speaking & Listening Standards, Comprehension & Collaboration, Strands 1–3 and Presentation of Knowledge & Ideas, Strands 4–6)
(Language Standards, Vocabulary Acquisition & Use, Strands 4–6)

1. Assign ELL students to partner-read the story with strong English readers/speakers. Students can alternate reading between pages, repeat passages after one another, or listen to the more fluent reader.
2. Have each student write three questions about the story. Then let students pair up and discuss the answers to the questions.
3. Depending on students' level of English proficiency, after the first reading:
 - Review the illustrations in order and have students summarize what is happening on each page, first orally, then in writing.
 - Have students work in pairs to retell either the plot of the story or key details. Then ask students to write a short summary, synopsis, or opinion about what they have read.
4. Have students give a short talk about what family and/or friends means to them or share a time when they helped someone who was having a bad day and needed help.
5. The book contains several content-specific and academic words that may be unfamiliar to students. Based on students' prior knowledge, review some or all of the vocabulary. Expose English Language Learners to multiple vocabulary strategies. Have students make predictions about word meanings, look up and record word definitions from a dictionary, write the meaning of the word or phrase in their own words, draw a picture of the meaning of the word, list synonyms and antonyms, create an action for each word, and write a meaningful sentence that demonstrates the definition of the word.

Social and Emotional Learning

(Speaking & Listening Standards, Comprehension & Collaboration, Strands 1–3 and Presentation of Knowledge & Ideas, Strands 4–6)

(Language Standards, Vocabulary Acquisition & Use, Strands 4–6)

Social and emotional learning involves being aware of and regulating emotions for healthy development. In addition to understanding one's own feelings, strong socio-emotional development allows individuals to develop empathy for others and to establish and maintain relationships.

Use the following prompts to help students study the socio-emotional aspects of Benji, the Bad Day, and Me:

1. How does Benji demonstrate empathy (understanding the feelings of another person) in Benji, the Bad Day, and Me? How does he show that he cares about Sammy through his actions? What are ways that students can show empathy without saying anything to their classmates or friends? Give examples.
2. Select an illustration and describe what emotions are being conveyed. How can you tell that particular emotion is being shown in the illustration? Why?
3. What are the different ways that you can comfort someone when she or he is having a bad day? Create a chart in the classroom so that students can refer to it throughout the year. Why do students think those things are helpful? What are some situations when they have helped someone feel better during a bad day?
4. Choose an emotion that interests you: happiness, sadness, frustration, anger, etc. Discuss or write about what that emotion looks like in Benji, the Bad Day, and Me.
5. Have students chart Sammy's emotions over the course of the story. How does he feel when he walks in the door from school? When Mama says to be careful around the block city? When he spills the milk? When Benji comforts him? Use the illustrations as a visual reference and way to tap into students' visual literacy skills.

INTERDISCIPLINARY ACTIVITIES

(Introduction to the Standards, page 7: Students who are college and career ready must be able to build strong content knowledge, value evidence, and use technology and digital media strategically and capably)

Use some of the following activities to help students integrate their reading experiences with other curriculum areas. These can also be used for extension activities, for advanced readers, and for building a home-school connection.

English Language Arts

(Reading Standards, Key Ideas and Details, Strands 1-3; Craft and Structure, Strands 4-6; Integration of Knowledge & Ideas, Strands 7-9; Range of Reading of Text Complexity, Strand 10)

(Writing Standards, Text Types & Purposes, Strands 1-3; Production & Distribution of Writing, Strands 4 and 6; Research to Build & Present Knowledge, Strands 7-9; Range of Writing, Strand 10)

(Speaking and Listening Standards, Comprehension and Collaboration, Strands 1-3; Presentation of Knowledge and Ideas, Strands 4-6)

1. Complete an X chart for Sammy. Students can complete this diagram for different sections of the book, and fill out what Sammy did, what he heard, what he saw, and draw a scene. Afterwards, students can write one big thought from the details of their findings to make a conclusion about Sammy's character.

2. Compare and contrast the Alexander and the Terrible, Horrible, No Good Very Bad Day with Benji, the Bad Day and Me.

- What are some similar things that Alexander and Sammy experience on their bad days? What events are different?
 - What could Alexander learn from Sammy? Why?
 - What could Sammy learn from Alexander? Why?
 - How do both books present the bad days similarly? Differently?
 - How do both books portray emotions? How does Judith Viorst demonstrate how Alexander is feeling? How does Sally J. Pla demonstrate how Sammy is feeling?
3. Have students examine the spread with Benji looking at Sammy after he spilled the milk. There are no words on this spread. Why do you think the author chose to not have any text on these pages? Have students brainstorm the reason why Sally J. Pla omitted the words. How did this absence impact them as readers? How did it affect the way they understood both Benji and Sammy's feelings? If they were to put words on the pages, what would they write? How would that change the story?
 4. Have students select a quote or a few sentences from the book to write about Sammy's actions or feelings. Why did they choose to write about that particular quote? What are their reactions to those statements? Have students choose a quote from the beginning, middle, and end of the book. What do they notice about the change in those statements throughout the book? What does this reveal about Sammy's character?
 5. Encourage students think of ways that Sammy could help Benji when he's having a bad day. Students can work in partners or in small groups and write a response or discuss how Sammy can help Benji when he's having a hard time. Have students think about what they know about Benji from the book to help inform their decisions as to how Sammy could support Benji when he's feeling sad or frustrated. What are the kinds of supports that Benji would need? Why?
 6. Assign students the characters of Benji or Sammy and have them brainstorm about a guiding question: what and how can this character teach us? Have students share out their findings. How is this character important to the book, and what lessons did they teach us over the course of the story? How did their actions develop the story and impact what you learned about both Benji and Sammy?
 7. Envision a sequel to Benji, the Bad Day, and Me. Have students think about what would happen in the follow-up story. Who would they choose to write about and why? What would happen in their story? Encourage students to write their own sequel with accompanying illustrations. Have students look at the way Sally J. Pla describes emotions in the book when Sammy's having a bad day (i.e. "fence-kicking, rain-dripping, milk-spilling day") to influence their own writing.
 8. Come up with questions to interview the author, Sally J. Pla. What was her process behind creating Benji, the Bad Day, and Me? What was her inspiration for Benji and Sammy's relationship? Read the Author's Note with students and have them discuss what they learned and how it made them think about the book differently. Why did she write this book for young readers? Consider reaching out to Sally J. Pla for an author visit, either in person or virtually.
 9. Encourage students to think about Sammy and Benji's sibling relationship. Explore whether Sammy is a good role model for Benji. Have children consider why Sammy and Benji continue to play together even though Sammy feels impatient towards Benji and other times feels ignored.

Social Studies/Geography

(Reading Standards, Key Ideas and Details, Strands 1–3; Craft and Structure, Strands 4–6; Integration of Knowledge & Ideas, Strands 7–9; Range of Reading of Text Complexity, Strand 10)
(Writing Standards, Text Types & Purposes, Strands 1–3; Production & Distribution of Writing, Strands 4 and 6; Research to Build & Present Knowledge, Strands 7–9; and Range of Writing, Strand 10)

1. Have students learn more about Autism through the resources provided in the Background section of this guide. What did students learn about Autism from reading Benji, the Bad Day, and Me that they had not known previously? Have students present their findings from their research about Autism through different organizations to the class. Be cognizant of neurodiverse students in your own classroom and think about different ways to approach teaching Autism to ensure inclusivity and accuracy.
2. Encourage students to research other books with neurodiverse characters. What did they find from their search? What did they find about the books with neurodiverse characters? What do students think could be done in their schools or the publishing industry to encourage more books with neurodiverse characters? Have students brainstorm different ways to advocate for more books with neurodiverse characters, either through a letter, petition, or other ways to get involved in the community and their library. See the Imagination Soup article for more texts and as a resource for students to get started (<https://imaginationsoup.net/books-kids-characters-autism-spectrum/>).

Art/Media

(Reading Standards, Key Ideas and Details, Strands 1–3, Craft and Structure, Strands 4–6, Integration of Knowledge & Ideas, Strands 7–9, Range of Reading of Text Complexity, Strand 10)

(Writing Standards, Text Types & Purposes, Strands 1–3, Production & Distribution of Writing, Strands 4 and 6, Research to Build & Present Knowledge, Strands 7–9, and Range of Writing, Strand 10)

(Speaking and Listening Standards, Comprehension and Collaboration, Strands 1–3, Presentation of Knowledge and Ideas, Strands 4–6)

1. Come up with questions to interview the illustrator, Ken Min. What was his process behind creating the illustrations for Benji, the Bad Day, and Me? Why did he choose a particular artistic medium to create the illustrations? What was his inspiration to depict both Sammy and Benji in the ways that he did in the book? Have students look at other works by Ken Min, including Lee & Low's Hot Hot

Roti for Dada-Ji (<https://www.leeandlow.com/books/hot-hot-roti-for-dada-ji>). What do they notice about Ken Min's illustrations across his works?

2. Have students create a piece of art in response to a bad day that they had. How did it feel to have a bad day? What happened? Have students create their art through collage, painting, or whatever materials are available in your classroom or setting. Encourage students to do a gallery walk and examine other students' works. What do they notice about the art? What kinds of emotions are conveyed visually and not through words, similar to the spread in Benji, the Bad Day, and Me?
3. Encourage students to select an illustration that resonated with them from Benji, the Bad Day, and Me. Have students write a reflection about the illustration. What stood out to them? How did it make them feel? What did it make them think about?

School-Home Connection

(Reading Standards, Integration of Knowledge and Ideas, Strands 7 and 9)

(Writing Standards, Text Types & Purposes, Strands 1–3, Production & Distribution of Writing, Strand 4, and Research to Build & Present Knowledge, Strands 7–9, Range of Writing, Strand 10)

(Speaking and Listening Standards, Comprehension and Collaboration, Strands 1–3, Presentation of Knowledge and Ideas, Strands 4–6)

1. Have students ask caregivers how they deal with bad days. Everyone, both young people and adults, goes through difficult times or has tough days. Have students ask their caregivers or people at home what they do when they're having a bad day. What techniques help them feel better or relax? Why do these things help? How can students be helpful on days like this?
2. Provide students with the list of organizations from the Background section in this Teacher's Guide. If possible, have students and family members watch the video from the National Autistic Society and discuss what they learned about Autism together. What was it like to watch this video as a family? How do they think about Autism differently?

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Sally J. Pla is the award-winning author of two novels for young people, The Someday Birds and Stanley Will Probably Be Fine. Many of Pla's stories are based on her experience of raising three active little boys, very close in age. When her sons were young and having a bad day, they loved being "made into burritos" — getting wrapped tightly in their blankets. The tight pressure appealed especially to Pla's autistic son. Pla lives with her family in Southern California. You can find her online at sallyjpla.com.

ABOUT THE ILLUSTRATOR

Ken Min's picture book debut Hot, Hot Roti for Dada-Ji, published by Lee & Low Books, received the Picture Book Honor for Literature from the Asian Pacific American Librarians Association (APALA). Ken is an illustrator and animation storyboard artist for commercials and animated TV shows such as Futurama, Fairly Odd Parents, and New Looney Tunes. His illustration work has been recognized numerous times by the Society of Children's Books Writers & Illustrators (SCBWI). Min lives in Los Angeles, California. You can see more of his artwork online at
